1. This is in reference to our recent conversation with the Deputy Comptroller concerning a survey or review in each BF office by a Task Group consisting of one individual from TAS, one individual from Finance Division, and possibly one individual from the Comptroller's immediate staff.

2. Attached in draft form is a suggested outline of items which might be reviewed in connection with these surveys. This list is divided into two parts; Part I lists those items to be reviewed and commented upon in general terms and Part II lists those items which should be reviewed and commented upon in specific terms. This list is still in draft form and will need to be edited and refined, both as to content and format.

3. My suggestions concerning this Task Group effort are as follows:
- That the Task Group confine its survey in each office to a factual review only, and not get involved in recommendations for remedial action or adequacy of staffing in each individual office.
 - That the TAS member be in charge of the Group and record the findings made in each office, so that when all offices have been surveyed the results can be utilized for the preparation of a comprehensive report with accompanying general conclusions and recommendations.
 - That the Finance Division member(s) be rotated between the Certifying Officers of the respective area components, so that the facts gained can be directly applied in connection with his day to day work with the area office.
 - That we refine the attached list and provide the Task Group with specific instructions respecting the scope and nature of the survey.

SUBJECT : ~~Financial Advisory Committee Surveys~~
Task Group to Survey Financial Practices

1. The Comptroller Financial Advisory Committee recently reported on two surveys it had conducted. One was concerned with ^{attempting to determine those} which financial procedures, methods and techniques ^{which should} could be improved or eliminated and the ^{determining possible changes in reporting requirements.} other with reports. The Committee arrived at the following conclusions:

- "a. The procedures and methods problem is interrelated with the reports problem. The two surveys, although conducted about nine months apart, showed that most of the procedures and methods used in the offices were designed to accumulate information required (1) by the Comptroller for reporting purposes, and (2) to answer questions raised in connection with budgets and operations. If there could be a change in reporting requirements, if the machines could satisfy more of the requirements, and if there could be some standardization of approach to inquiry information, then, the offices felt there could be possible saving in procedures and methods.
- b. Most offices believe that what they are doing is satisfactory. The Committee feels that there is room for improvement but the specifics cannot be located through the present informal approach of asking -- nothing short of a full-time on-the-spot review by a task group can do the job."

2. Two of the recommendations made by the Committee are as follows:

- "a. The Comptroller prepare a document describing the kinds of financial data currently available. Such a document could be used to offset the common complaint that the offices are not aware of the kinds of data available and, therefor, establish their own system to obtain data that may be readily available from a source within the Office of the Comptroller.
- b. A small task group (not more than three) be appointed to work full-time on an office by office survey to review working methods and procedures and to determine the financial data and reporting requirements. It is felt that a technically qualified group is in a better position to ferret out unnecessary procedures in an office and to assist the office in determining requirements for financial data. Such a group, to be of any value, must be able to devote full attention to assisting the offices; the members should be free of all other assignments....."

MEMORANDUM FOR: Comptroller

18 OCT 1962

SUBJECT : Financial Advisory Committee Surveys

1. The Advisory Committee recently requested each of the offices to submit comments concerning which financial procedures, methods and techniques could be improved or eliminated. Earlier in the year, a financial reports survey had been conducted. The Committee arrived at the following conclusions on the survey results:

- a. The procedures and methods problem is interrelated with the reports problem. The two surveys, although conducted about nine months apart, showed that most of the procedures and methods used in the offices were designed to accumulate information required (1) by the Comptroller for reporting purposes, and (2) to answer questions raised in connection with budgets and operations. If there could be a change in reporting requirements, if the machines could satisfy more of the requirements, and if there could be some standardization of approach to inquiry information, then, the offices felt there could be possible saving in procedures and methods.
- b. Most offices believe that what they are doing is satisfactory. The Committee feels that there is room for improvement but the specifics cannot be located through the present informal approach of asking -- nothing short of a full-time on-the-spot review by a task group can do the job.

in forward 2. The suggestions for procedural improvements have been forwarded to the Technical Accounting Staff for review and evaluation. Because most of the comments dealt with technicalities rather than proposals for major changes it is doubtful that any material savings in manpower will result.

3. The reports survey did reveal a major weakness in our system -- there is a clear lack of understanding as to the kinds of financial data available and, most interesting, how the data can be used to improve financial controls and management in general. There appears to be a feeling that the Office of the Comptroller is issuing reports it wants without complete concern for the operating office. Of course, this is not true but does point up the need for better training (or education) in the composition and use of financial data. The general observations were:

- a. Much information is duplicated in various reports,
- b. There is an unusually large number of reports required for budget purposes only as compared to those presently required for operating purposes,

- c. Universally poor identification of reports and the data contained in them, and
 - d. Timeliness -- the reports are generally considered to be too late to be of any value other than budget preparation.
4. In view of the need for better and more timely financial information, the objective to make the most practical use of machines, and the desire to conserve manpower the Committee makes the following recommendations:
- a. The Comptroller prepare a document describing the kinds of financial data currently available. Such a document could be used to offset the common complaint that the offices are not aware of the kinds of data available and, therefor, establish their own system to obtain data that may be readily available from a source within the Office of the Comptroller.
 - b. A small task group (not more than three) be appointed to work full-time on an office by office survey to review working methods and procedures and to determine the financial data and reporting requirements. It is felt that a technically qualified group is in a better position to ferret out unnecessary procedures in an office and to assist the office in determining requirements for financial data. Such a group, to be of any value, must be able to devote full attention to assisting the offices; the members should be free of all other assignments. An adequate job, as conceived by the Committee, could require up to three years of study. This does not mean that no results would be obtained until the total survey is completed. On the contrary, since each office appears to have its own system, improvements should be effected with each office survey.
 - c. The use of revolving funds for procurement purposes be reconsidered as a means of simplifying property accounting procedures.
 - d. Expedite the move towards mechanized centralized accounting; the Committee feels this approach holds the greatest potential for manpower savings.

Remarks:

Attached is a brief report on the financial procedures and reports surveys. The report reflects unanimous opinion other than in par. 4 b (not all members felt the series of office surveys might require up to 3 years to complete). The Committee desires to meet with you to explore more fully some individual views and to discuss any questions you may have.
